College Street Transformation — Work was completed last March on the new College Street Plaza on the Macon Campus, which transformed the old asphalt street and the Connell Student Center parking lot into a functional and attractive public space. In addition to removing the Connell parking lot, two houses adjacent to Plunkett Hall were demolished to make way for the new plaza. Featuring a circular green space similar to Cruz Plaza, but smaller, other elements include brick pavers, additional landscaping and lighting, a sand volleyball court near the residence halls, and a new campus entrance on Coleman Avenue. Meredith Keating White, executive director of campus life and student involvement, described the plaza as “a beautiful space that already looks like a natural part of campus, and it has enhanced the entryway and ambiance of Connell Student Center, as well as Mary Erin Porter, Plunkett and Legacy residence halls.”

NEW FOOD OPTIONS AND MORE COME TO STUDENT CENTER AS MERCER CULINARY GROUP LAUNCHES

By JENNIFER FALK

Big changes came to the Mercer University student dining experience this fall, including expanded meal options and contactless food pickup in the Connell Student Center.

The improvements are part of a major rebranding of Mercer Dining to Mercer Culinary Group, signifying a strategic shift and expansion beyond traditional dining services. The rebranding, which was effective July 1, marks the group's 35th anniversary serving Mercer.

"Aramark (the food service provider behind Mercer Culinary Group) has been on campus with us since 1989, and this is the most dynamic investment that they've made at Mercer University to enrich the campus experience," said Ken Boyer, associate vice president for Auxiliary Services.

Over the summer, the area where Which Wich was located was transformed into The Drop, a virtual kitchen. The Drop opened Aug. 19 and features three different restaurant concepts that can be rotated out for new ones as students' tastes change, said Ed Robertson, resident district manager of Mercer Culinary Group.

“This gives us lots of versatility, so when we take surveys with the students and they say maybe we need an Asian concept on campus or we need a Mexican concept, we can do that,” he said. “So, in real time, we can get feedback and get what the students really want on campus.”

The restaurant concepts that premiered this fall include The Spread, featuring chef-inspired signature subs and house-made spreads; Smokehouse 1833: Barbecue and Grill, featuring locally sourced smoked meats; and Beary Blends Fruit Smoothies and More, featuring fruit smoothies and acai bowls.

Students order from the restaurants at a kiosk or using the Transact Mobile Ordering app, which already offered mobile ordering for other retail dining locations on campus, like Chick-fil-A and Panda Express. Students then pick up their food from secure lockers.

“Over 60% of consumers use takeout order or delivery once a week,” Boyer said. “What this new concept is going to do is to allow us to further enhance what we’ve already done with mobile ordering and order from different concepts that will be able to address the different culinary needs of students.”

Along with Which Wich, Brewed Awakenings also was replaced, and Mercer Culinary Group installed a Costa Coffee Smart Café that makes custom coffee drinks and offers 24/7 availability, Robertson said. The autonomous system offers more than 200 barista-quality drink choices and can make each in less than 90 seconds.

The Drop is the first piece of a multi-year renovation to the Connell Student Center. Renovations to the building’s entrances are in the design phase, including plans for a new entrance off Cruz Plaza, Boyer said.

Improvements also are planned for the lobby and seating area on the main level of Connell, including modern collaborative spaces where students can eat and work. An expansion of Tot’s Corner, a cashier-less convenience store, is planned as well.

“By thoughtfully integrating dining improvements into the broader renovation plan, the student center will become a more vibrant, functional and appealing hub for the entire campus community to enjoy,” said Shonda Lewis, marketing manager for Mercer Culinary Group.

The rebranding is a culmination of years of work to enhance the student dining experience.

This includes initiatives such as partnering with The Common Market to provide sustainable, local produce in the dining halls; offering a True Balance station that doesn’t use any of the top nine allergens; and providing the culinary team with professional development opportunities.

Three chefs — Jimmy Brown, Vivian Byrd and Jarvis Napier — have achieved Pro Chef II certification for their advanced skills and dedication to the culinary arts. Byrd now is pursuing Pro Chef III certification.

“This transformation should make Mercer among the best in class,” Robertson said. “With these exciting additions, we’re not just keeping up. We’re looking ahead to become the next in class.”

NEW COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS AND SCIENCES DEAN

A PROFESSOR AT HEART

By JENNIFER FALK

Dr. Scott

Long before he was a history professor, the new College of Liberal Arts and Sciences dean was interested in the past.

“My dad was a seminary professor who taught, among other things, Old Testament history, and he loved history,” said Dr. John Thomas Scott, who goes by Tom. “He would take me around historical sites and give me history books to read. So, I’ve been a history nerd since I was a kid.”

Those experiences during his early years led him to pursue a bachelor’s, master’s and Ph.D. in history. He joined Mercer’s faculty in the History Department in 1991 and has served twice as chair. Over the past three decades, he’s been doing >> some of what he enjoys most: conducting research, writing, teaching and learning.

LEAHYETTER PHOTO

Now, he's applying his skills and experience to a new role. In March, Dr. Scott was named the new dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. He previously served as interim dean for six months, after then-Dean Dr. Anita Olson Gustafson assumed the presidency of Presbyterian College in Clinton, South Carolina.

Dr. Scott has spent the past few months learning his new role, including getting to know the needs of other departments, understanding the college's complex budget and working with colleagues across campus offices.

"The learning curve is very steep," he said.

The College of Liberal Arts and Sciences is the largest and oldest of Mercer's schools and colleges. Nearly all traditional undergraduate students will take at least one class in the college to fulfill a general education requirement.

College of Liberal Arts and Sciences majors uniquely benefit from a liberal arts education, Dr. Scott said.

Liberal arts classes tend to be small, allowing students to interact closely with faculty. In addition, liberal arts students are exposed to multiple perspectives about problems that they're trying to solve, as seen in the Great Books and Integrative Studies curricula. The college offers 40 majors, many of which are interdisciplinary and cross-disciplinary, Dr. Scott said.

"When you put the smaller setting together with this interdisciplinary approach, you end up using and learning skill sets that are important personally but also important in terms of employment and career," he said.

As a historian, Dr. Scott's primary field of research has been 18th and early 19th century North Atlantic history. Most of it has been geared toward religious history and individuals at that time. For the past 15 years, his research has focused on Georgia in the 18th century.

"What fascinates me is different people with different ways of living," he said. "The past is the most diverse place you will ever find because you get to see changes over time, from decade to decade and century to century.

"And so, you really do get exposed to this very broad rainbow of people and their experiences and their struggles."

The goal of any academic, Dr. Scott said, is to try to understand the human experience, make sense of it and figure out a path forward for yourself, your community and the world.

"I see the past as the largest laboratory. We're only observers. We can't redo it, but there's a large amount of information in the past that's available," he said. "And so, I see the past as really one of the best elements to study to understand the human experience."

For Dr. Scott, his faith plays an important role as well. He regularly teaches Sunday school classes at First Presbyterian Church of Macon, where he and his wife, Holly, are longtime members. The couple has four adult children.

Dr. Scott enjoys travel, yardwork and classic films. A movie poster for Casablanca hangs behind his desk in his office in the R. Kirby Godsey Administration Building. On the wall to his right is a poster for The Searchers, a 1956 Western. Science fiction is his favorite genre.

"One of the courses that I have taught is a class on how to use American film as historical documents," he said. "In that class we spend probably half the time trying to teach them how to read a film, so we talk about things like editing and lighting and character positioning and costuming. But we also talk about how a film can be used to understand the period that the film was made in."

His love for classic films is another interest he picked up from his dad growing up in Clinton, Mississippi, a small town outside of Jackson.

"My dad loved classic movies," he said. "When I was growing up, you could only catch a classic movie if it happened to run on one of the three channels that was available at the time or if it was a re-release at a local theater that you could go to. And I would watch old films with my dad."

In college, Dr. Scott studied at the University of Leeds in the United Kingdom. The experience forced him to find his own way in a place unlike home and interact with people different from himself.

The tutorial-style education format opened his eyes to what student and professor relationships could be like and inspired him to strive to have those kinds of relationships in his own career. As a historian, he saw early America from the British perspective.

"I think that study abroad experience really set the path of my career in terms of thinking about the past and thinking about what I wanted to do," he said.

Describing himself as a professor at heart, Dr. Scott said he never imagined he would be a dean.

"But as events turned out, here I am, and so, it has suited me." ♦

“ I SEE THE PAST AS THE LARGEST LABORATORY... AS REALLY ONE OF THE BEST ELEMENTS TO STUDY TO UNDERSTAND THE HUMAN EXPERIENCE. ”

NEW MEDICAL CAMPUS

SCHOOL OF MEDICINE OPENS CLINICAL CAMPUS IN VALDOSTA

Mercer faculty and students joined leaders from across the state at SGMC Health in Valdosta on July 18 to celebrate the opening of the School of Medicine and SGMC Health's clinical campus and simulation lab where third- and fourth-year students will live and work for their last two years of medical school. The Valdosta campus features a dedicated medical education unit and offers all required clerkships and electives of Year 3, as well as the sub-internship, elective and required elective rotations for Year 4 of the M.D. program. The first group of 17 third-year medical students transferred to Valdosta from MUSM's Columbus, Macon and Savannah campuses and began clinical rotations in July. Opening a clinical site in Valdosta expands the school's reach to a critical medically underserved region. In addition to SGMC Health, students will rotate through clerkships at other regional facilities.

TRUSTEES APPROVE RECORD OPERATING BUDGET AND TWO NEW GRADUATE DEGREE PROGRAMS, DEDICATE MOYE CENTER

Mercer's Board of Trustees, meeting on the Cecil B. Day Graduate and Professional Campus in Atlanta in April, adopted a record $308.8 million operating budget for 2024-25, exclusive of more than $45 million in federal research grants. Continuing more than a decade of below-market annual tuition increases, trustees voted to limit the tuition increase for Macon undergraduate programs to 3.5% for 2024-25. Some programs, such as theology and certain graduate nursing tracks, will have no tuition increases for 2024-25. Law students will see a 2% increase, and M.D. students in the School of Medicine will see a 3% increase. Tuition increases for most other programs range from 3% to 4%. In addition, trustees approved a new Master of Science in instructional design and technology in the Tift College of Education and a new Ph.D. in biomedical sciences in the School of Medicine. They also held a dedication ceremony for the new Tony and Nancy Moye Pharmacy and Health Sciences Center.

Following the April 19 Board of Trustees meeting on the Cecil B. Day Graduate and Professional Campus in Atlanta, trustees and other guests participated in a formal dedication of the Tony and Nancy Moye Pharmacy and Health Sciences Center, a 65,000-square-foot building that houses learning, teaching and administrative space for the College of Pharmacy and other health sciences programs. Classes began in the new facility in January.

JOURNALISM SCHOLARSHIP HONORING REG MURPHY ESTABLISHED BY OMNICOM

A new scholarship named for Mercer alumnus and former trustee J. Reginald "Reg" Murphy has been established for students pursuing a journalism major within the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. The Omnicom Reg Murphy Scholarship in Journalism will be awarded to up to 10 students annually for the next 10 years. The scholarship will provide financial support to students pursuing a degree in journalism and will further strengthen the school's commitment to creating leaders who make a positive difference in the world. Juniors or seniors who have demonstrated engagement in the major and shown aptitude and curiosity in journalism and media studies will be eligible for the scholarship. In addition to the scholarships, Omnicom will provide a limited number of student internship opportunities for journalism majors at various Omnicom offices in Atlanta and the New York region.

Where Students with Dyslexia Thrive

MERCER LAUNCHES

Roberts Academy for Dyslexic Children

By JAMIE DICKSON, CLAS '05 Photographs by LEAH YETTER

Sunlight streams into Teresa Kalmbach's 5th-grade classroom as she organizes a learning activity for her students.

"I'm so excited to be here," she said. "This is a dream come true for me." Kalmbach is one of seven highly trained educators at Roberts Academy at Mercer University — Georgia's only school for dyslexic students outside metro Atlanta and the most affordable for dyslexic students in the state.

The Academy, located about two blocks from Mercer's Macon campus, serves students in grades 2-5. Its mission is to prepare students with dyslexia to achieve academic success through dynamic educational programs.

"I know firsthand how desperately Middle Georgia needs this school," Kalmbach said. "I wish it had been here when my son was younger." >>

SOME OF THE WORLD'S MOST PROLIFIC SCIENTISTS, ARTISTS, ACTORS, MUSICIANS AND POLITICAL LEADERS ARE DYSLEXIC — STEVEN SPIELBERG, OCTAVIA SPENCER, TONY BENNETT, CHER, JENNIFER ANISTON, GWEN STEFANI, PABLO PICASSO, LEONARDO DA VINCI AND SEVEN U.S. PRESIDENTS.

Now an adult, Jason Kalmbach has a successful career in information technology. “He makes more money than I will ever make,” Kalmbach said, laughing. But Jason’s journey with dyslexia continues as Kalmbach’s grandson, Eli (7), begins to navigate his own journey with the learning difference.

The Roberts Academy Story

Roberts Academy at Mercer was made possible through a historic and transformational gift from philanthropists Hal and Marjorie Roberts. The Robertses are passionate about supporting children with dyslexia because three of their grandchildren struggled to learn to read. After being diagnosed with dyslexia, the children attended a specialized school for dyslexia in Atlanta where their reading skills quickly improved and their academic confidence was restored. “We witnessed firsthand the toll dyslexia takes on a family and a child’s self-esteem, and then we saw the transformation that takes place in the right learning environment,” said Hal Roberts. “We know what works for children with dyslexia, and we need to make it accessible for all children.” Gifts from the Roberts family have also established

Her oldest son, Jason, was diagnosed with dyslexia in the fourth grade after years of struggling to learn to read. His undiagnosed dyslexia affected every part of his academic experience as well as his self-esteem. “He was reluctant to try in school, because he didn’t want his peers to know he was struggling,” Kalmbach said. “He knew something was wrong, he just didn’t know what.” But even after receiving his diagnosis, he continued to struggle. “His teachers tried to help him, but nothing was working,” she said. “His reading deficits were severe, and nothing he was learning seemed to stick.”

Once Jason entered eighth grade with little to no literacy gains, the Kalmbachs decided to look for outside support. Kalmbach, who was working as a pediatric nurse, left her job to help her son get the extra support he needed. She attended Orton-Gillingham parent training — an approach to literacy instruction specifically designed for dyslexic learners. But it didn’t take long for her to realize Jason needed support beyond what she could provide, so she enrolled him in a specialized learning center in Atlanta for students with dyslexia. “We spent hours every day commuting back and forth to Atlanta from Warner Robins so he could take classes at this center,” Kalmbach said. “I would nap in my car while he was in school. It was exhausting, but it was worth it.”

After four months at the center, Jason’s literacy level increased by four grades. Kalmbach was so amazed by his progress that she decided to pursue a second career in special education. “I knew our schools needed more teachers specifically trained to help students with dyslexia and other learning differences. I was so inspired by my son’s progress that I wanted to make sure that other dyslexic kids didn’t have to travel so far to get the support they needed,” she said. Kalmbach now holds bachelor’s, master’s and specialist degrees in elementary and special education as well as endorsements in general reading and dyslexia.

Finding Their Superpowers

Dyslexic individuals are often extremely creative, great problem solvers and strong critical thinkers. Some of the world’s most prolific scientists, artists, actors, musicians and political leaders are dyslexic. These include Steven Spielberg, Octavia Spencer, Tony Bennett, Cher, Jennifer Aniston, Gwen Stefani, Pablo Picasso, Leonardo Da Vinci and seven U.S. presidents.

Dyslexia is also often a family affair. According to Understood.org — the leading nonprofit empowering the 70 million people with learning and thinking differences in the United States — it has a heritability rate of 40-80%.

“Thanks to the work I did with my son, we were able to spot Eli’s dyslexia early on, and now he will get the intervention he needs much sooner than his uncle,” Kalmbach said.

two other specialized dyslexia schools: The Roberts Academy at Florida Southern College in Lakeland, Florida, and the Roberts Academy at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee.

Hal Roberts said he chose to establish the schools at universities because he wants to make the biggest impact possible.

“Higher education drives progress in our country. It is the staging ground for thought leadership and cutting-edge research, and the launching pad for the next generation of thinkers and doers,” he said.

The connection between Roberts Academy and Mercer is symbiotic, said Dr. Thomas Koballa, dean of Mercer’s Tift College of Education.

“Roberts Academy will benefit from being part of Mercer because it will have quick access to top professors, leading research and state-of-the-art facilities,” he said. “In turn, the school will help shape the next generation of educators through its presence on campus. Roberts Academy will shine a spotlight on dyslexia and better prepare our students to change the lives of children.”

What is Dyslexia?

Dyslexia affects up to 20% of the U.S. population and makes up 80% of those diagnosed with a learning disability, according to the International Dyslexia Association (IDA).

“But at Roberts, we don’t call it a disability,” said the Academy’s Head of School Joy Wood. “We call it a difference, because these students learn in a different way. And at Roberts, we teach them to read in a way that makes sense for their brains.”

According to the IDA, dyslexia is a brain-based condition that causes trouble with reading words accurately and quickly, as well as with spelling and writing.

These issues often arise despite having strong cognitive skills and receiving good instruction. As a result, students with dyslexia often struggle to understand what they read. They read less overall, which can slow down vocabulary acquisition and knowledge growth, as well as impact their self-esteem.

“Many dyslexic students believe that they can’t read because they are lazy or dumb, and that couldn’t be further from the truth,” Wood said. “One of our goals is to reframe dyslexia as a superpower, because once

The Roberts Academy Difference

Roberts Academy uses the Orton Gillingham Approach — an individualized, intensive approach to reading instruction designed specifically for students with dyslexia.

Rooted in 80 years of research and teaching practice, it starts with the basics and focuses on the structure of words and language.

Gradually, it weaves the skills of reading, spelling and writing into an integrated whole. The approach is diagnostic, personalized, multisensory, structured, cognitive and success-oriented.

Every teacher at the Academy is trained in Orton-Gillingham and will continue to receive training throughout the school year.

“The Orton-Gillingham Approach is the gold standard in dyslexia intervention and remediation,” Wood said. “All students can benefit from Orton-Gillingham, but it’s the only way dyslexic students can learn to read.”

While reading is the focus of the Academy, the school’s curriculum is aligned with the Georgia Standards for Excellence; students will learn mathematics, science, social studies, computer science, fine arts, health and physical education and English language arts.

Because the curriculum will follow the Georgia standards, Academy students will keep pace with the learning advances made by students attending public or independent schools in Georgia.

DEAN, TIFT COLLEGE OF EDUCATION

“Our goal is to remediate and release,” said Wood. “We want to provide our students with the tools they’ll need to be successful in any educational environment.”

Additionally, the Academy’s small class sizes ensure each student will get the individualized and prescriptive instruction they need to succeed. Homerooms at the Academy will not exceed 12 students, and reading groups will never exceed six students.

The Inaugural Year

In August, the Academy’s faculty, as well as Mercer’s cheerleaders and mascot, Tot, welcomed 31 students to the Academy for their first day of school.

“That was a very exciting day,” said Wood. “It was two years in the making, and to see all of our hard work come to fruition was extremely rewarding.”

Roberts Academy parent Betsy Griffith said she and her husband, Wes, chose Roberts Academy for their son, Knox, because of its approach.

“We think that Roberts Academy will not only help Knox learn but also teach him to advocate for himself when he transitions back to the school of our choice,” she said. “Knox struggled last year in first grade, and there were many days he would come home in tears because of being so frustrated. At Roberts, he will be understood and accepted. We believe he will begin to enjoy learning and regain his self-esteem.”

The school can accommodate 180 students but won’t reach full capacity for several years. “Our priority is to maintain integrity while supporting each learner effectively,” Wood said.

Kalmbach is excited about the launch of what she hopes will be an incredible school year.

“We are creating something very special here,” she said. “We’re going to change lives, and I can’t wait to watch it happen.” ♦

Grad's Personal Experiences Lead Him to Pursue Career Helping Others Cope With Trauma

By ANDREA HONAKER

A devastating accident while serving in the military took Nathaneal Barrow from feeling like a hero to a zero.

With a painful and long physical recovery, accompanied by additional personal struggles, he slipped into darkness. But eventually, he found the light as well as a calling to help others facing difficult times.

On May 13, Barrow donned a cap and gown for Mercer's Macon campus commencement and celebrated the completion of his bachelor's degree in psychology from the College of Professional Advancement. He's already begun working toward a master's degree in clinical mental health counseling. >>

Barrow's story of perseverance led him to be awarded Mercer's 2024 McAfee Vision and Leadership Scholarship. Candidates who demonstrate leadership abilities on campus or in the community are nominated for the scholarship by the dean of their school or college.

Barrow, a Macon resident, said he and his siblings had a hard childhood as they grew up in foster care. He enrolled in the U.S. Army a year after finishing high school. About to become a father, he wanted to choose a heroic career that would make his son proud.

Barrow's military service earned him numerous awards, including the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, Afghanistan Campaign Medal with Campaign Star and NATO Medal for service in an imminent danger zone of hazardous duty.

After four years stationed at bases across the U.S., he deployed to Afghanistan, where he served for 11 months. His primary task was route clearance, which involves clearing roads of obstacles such as improvised explosive devices (IEDs) and retrofitting military bases. While on patrol, the vehicle in which Barrow was riding hit an IED and rolled, severely injuring Barrow's back, pelvis and abdominal organs.

He underwent two major reconstructive surgeries, followed by another to address complications. He thought he would never walk again. Barrow said it felt like "everybody had signed off on my fate" when he was medically retired from the military.

"It was devastating emotionally to go from being extremely active to being still," said Barrow, who now has three children, ages 15, 13 and 5. "The pain in itself was excruciating, and the things that I was able to do — playing with my kids, picking them up, tickling them — they were gone. Those were the kinds of things that hurt the most. But on the other side of that, those were the reasons to keep trying, regardless of the diagnosis."

With rehab, he was able to go from a wheelchair to walking with a cane to walking independently. He was able to do most of the physical things he could before the accident, but other challenges remained.

"There were deep pockets of pain medication and alcohol use, trying to sort through those emotions along the way," he said. "My youngest brother committed suicide, and it shook me to my core. I had already been through so many challenging things. He called me the night before he did it. We stayed on the phone for four hours. It felt like it wasn't enough. I took it very personally, and I got into my own therapy."

Barrow participated in a cognitive behavioral therapy program for 18 months. After completing the program, he continued to serve as a mentor to other veterans, which opened his eyes to a career as a licensed therapist.

"To take that kind of pain and suffering and twist it into something beautiful and helpful and give it out to someone else is a better response than drowning in it," Barrow said.

He chose to attend Mercer at the recommendation of his aunt, who is a therapist and Mercer alumna. Through hybrid and in-person classes on the Macon campus, Barrow received a "master-crafted" academic experience. His advisor, Associate Professor of Human Services and Psychology Dr. Merrin Oliver, helped him choose classes that were tailored to his interests and goals. He was inducted into Psi Chi psychology honor society.

"It felt like not only did I put my best into it, but it got validated by the incredible people that I had the opportunity to work with," Barrow said.

Reacclimating to an environment with peers was challenging for Barrow, who was focused on the academic side of his education but not the social aspect. While at the University Center gym one day, University Minister Dr. Craig McMahan introduced himself to Barrow and became an important source of support. Dr. McMahan connected him with other veterans, a "beautiful gift" that led to lifelong friendships, Barrow said.

Barrow completed his psychology degree in December 2023 and is currently enrolled in the clinical mental health counseling graduate program. After he completes his master's degree, he wants to focus on providing therapy to law enforcement officers, first responders and veterans who are dealing with trauma. He hopes to partner with Veterans Affairs facilities, local police departments and hospitals in this work.

Barrow said talking with mental health professionals who hadn't been deployed or didn't share a similar lifestyle to him created roadblocks during his own therapy. He was reluctant to open up and express himself. He hopes to be able to eliminate that barrier with his clients since he can relate to their experiences.

"As a therapist, that would be something that I could give immediately. It's not just that I know these things academically. I've lived through them," he said.

— Nathaneal Barrow, COPA '23

Barrow's inspiring story of perseverance led him to be awarded Mercer's 2024 McAfee Vision and Leadership Scholarship. Barrow said he was humbled to receive the recognition.

"It's hard to incorporate the good parts of all of that," he said. "It feels like a lot of these things are mixed with a lot of pain. Feeling like I did something that I had to do, it doesn't feel like I should be rewarded for that. But it feels like a huge honor."

Barrow is proud to show his children what he was able to accomplish and how he followed his passion. When he walked across the graduation stage, it was a celebration of not only him but his family.

"My grandfather, my mother, my kids, they'll get to see the results of all of the effort and stress and frustration that had been happening. It'll culminate publicly. It's a beautiful moment to be able to give to them, to show that it was all worth it, that they did something amazing," Barrow said. ♦

6 Women's Lacrosse Wins 6th Conference Championship

Another dominant campaign was on the menu for the Mercer women's lacrosse team in 2024 as the Bears amassed double-digit victories on the way to their third-straight Big South Conference championship, as well as their fifth league title in the last six seasons.

Mercer's 16-12 victory over High Point University at Five Star Stadium in the title bout of the Big South Conference tournament marked the 24th-straight win for the Orange and Black over league foes and secured the program's sixth NCAA Tournament berth under the direction of head coach Samantha Eustace. Mercer also improved to 24-7 at home with that triumph over the Panthers.

The Bears were blessed with a cornucopia of postseason accolades as Gabby DiVirgilio raked in the league's offensive player of the year crown, while fellow senior Kayla Soltys was named defensive player of the year and rookie Ansley Walters collected conference freshman of the year laurels. Seven Bears earned All-Big South Conference honors, including a trio of first-team selections.

The program's dominance in the classroom was on display again as well. Thirteen student-athletes picked up academic honor roll distinction from the Intercollegiate Women's Lacrosse Coaches Association (IWLCA) and three Bears made the College Sports Communicators (CSC) Academic All-District Team.

Senior Maddi Koury was awarded one of the highest honors in college sports as an NCAA postgraduate scholarship recipient. Only 21 student-athletes across NCAA Division I, II and III earn the scholarship each year.

BEARS SEND 256 TO SOCON ACADEMIC HONOR ROLL

A testament to a championship mindset both inside the playing arena and the classroom, the Mercer athletics department placed 256 student-athletes on the Southern Conference 2023-24 Academic Honor Roll. The Academic Honor Roll consists of student-athletes who participated in varsity sports and posted a 3.0 grade point average or higher for the academic year. Mercer's football team sent 68 student-athletes to the listing, while the baseball team had 38 student-athletes lauded with the honor. Six other teams sent 10 or more student-athletes to the distinguished list. A total of 78 Bears earned the Commissioners Medal as well, which is awarded to student-athletes who attain a GPA of 3.8 or higher throughout the academic year. A total of 2,473 student-athletes from the 10 member institutions and nine associate members earned the distinction. Lacrosse and beach volleyball student-athletes were not eligible for the SoCon Academic Honor Roll.

Michelle Clark-Heard Named Women's Basketball Head Coach

Mercer on March 22 appointed 26-year collegiate coaching veteran Michelle Clark-Heard as the women's basketball program's 11th head coach.

Clark-Heard made the move to Middle Georgia after spending the 2023-24 season on the staff at Mississippi State. She has amassed a 252-147 record in 13 seasons as a head coach, including previous stops at Kentucky State, Western Kentucky and Cincinnati, and has led her teams to seven postseason appearances, including four NCAA Tournament berths. She also has two regular season conference championships and a quartet of conference tournament titles in her stable as well.

Clark-Heard served a hybrid position on the Mississippi State coaching staff last season as both an assistant coach and the assistant athletics director for women's basketball. The Bulldogs flourished with her on the sidelines, collecting 21 victories and an appearance in the Women's Basketball Invitation Tournament (WBIT), while ranking among NCAA Division I's top scoring and rebounding teams, as well as one of the nation's top shot-blocking squads. Mississippi State also spent multiple weeks in both the Associated Press and USA Today Coaches Top 25 polls.

Prior to moving to Starkville, Clark-Heard compiled 74 wins across five seasons (2018-23) as the head coach at Cincinnati, including 20+ -win campaigns in each of her first two seasons at the helm of the Bearcats.

She and her husband, Luther, recently celebrated their 20th wedding anniversary.

Ryan Ridder Named Men's Basketball Head Coach

Ryan Ridder was named Mercer's 30th head men's basketball coach on March 15.

The 15-year collegiate coaching veteran comes to the Bears after leading University of Tennessee at Martin to 48 victories over the last three seasons, including a 21-11 mark in 2023-24. He has amassed a 191-120 (.614) record in nine seasons as a head coach — a career that includes previous head-coaching stops at both Daytona State and Bethune-Cookman.

Ridder bridged his first and second seasons in northwest Tennessee by leading the Skyhawks on a 9 1/2 game turnaround as UT Martin posted 19 victories during the 2022-23 campaign, a third-place finish in the final Ohio Valley Conference regular season standings and the program's fifth appearance all-time in the OVC Tournament semifinals. The 19 wins marked the fifth-most victories for the program in its more than three decades on the NCAA Division I level.

UT Martin boasted NCAA Division I's 23rd-ranked scoring offense (81.5 points/game) this past season, while also showcasing one of the nation's top rebounding teams as well. The Skyhawks captured 12 of their final 14 regular season contests to claim a share of the OVC regular season crown and the No. 2 seed in the OVC Tournament.

Ridder and his wife, the former Jen Calnan of Daytona Beach, Florida, have three daughters — Brixton, Remi and Marlee.

100 YEARS AGO

1924 - Professor Henry Fox Dismissed — In 1924, a special committee of the Board of Trustees was appointed to investigate the religious beliefs of biology professor Henry Fox. After meeting with Dr. Fox and inquiring into his beliefs, the committee decided his faith conflicted with that of the Georgia Baptist Convention, of which Mercer was a part, and they asked for his resignation. Dr. Fox refused to resign as he saw that as an admission of wrongdoing. President Rufus Weaver informed Dr. Fox that his position had been terminated and paid him his full salary. Students came to Dr. Fox's defense, passing a resolution emphasizing that he taught evolution only as a theory and that the main objective of his teaching was to find the truth. The Law Review began with two issues per year and has now expanded to five issues a year. It is the oldest regularly published law review in Georgia. ADVANCEMENT UPDATES

MEET OUR NEW STAFF MEMBERS

To better serve Mercer's alumni and friends, the Office of University Advancement and Office of Alumni Engagement recently added several new staff members to coordinate fundraising and alumni activities, as well as to build relationships and foster goodwill among its constituents.

Caroline Carlton, CLAS '15, EDU '21, joined the Office of University Advancement as director of development for the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences in October 2023. As director of development, Carlton's responsibilities include researching prospects, developing relationships with alumni and constituents, and generating annual fund and major gifts for the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Michael DuVall joined the Office of Alumni Engagement in December 2023 as the coordinator of alumni engagement. DuVall holds a B.A. in writing and communications from Abraham Baldwin Agricultural College, where he served as a student ambassador and worked as an intern with the advancement office. Before joining Mercer, he was the director of public relations and communications for Tattnall Square Academy in Macon. Loyal Alumni Giving Macon native Bob Hearn, CLAS '60, graduated from Lanier High School in 1956 and decided to attend Mercer so he could save money and live at home. While a student, he worked with his brother at Fickling & Walker Inc. and was actively involved on campus, serving as president of Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity and as a lieutenant colonel in ROTC. He was also president of Scabbard & Blade, a Distinguished Military Graduate and a member of Blue Key, Phi Eta Sigma, Student Senate and the German Club.

After graduating from Mercer, he entered the U.S. Army and served two years in Abilene, Texas, before returning to Macon to begin his civilian career and rejoining Fickling & Walker Inc., from which the mortgage operations were purchased by Trust Company of Georgia, a predecessor of SunTrust Banks, in 1979. He retired as president and CEO of SunTrust Mortgage Inc. in 1996.

Hearn made his first gift to Mercer in 1962 and has made a gift every year since, making him one of Mercer's most loyal donors.

"I felt it was my obligation to support Mercer financially — not just a choice, but a requirement," said Hearn. "Young alumni may feel that they are not able to give because their income is limited, but no matter how small the gift, they add to the percentage of alumni donors who support the University. Alumni support shows prospective students, foundations and other constituents that Mercer alumni believe in the value of a Mercer education."

A gift to Mercer has the power to impact the lives of our students by strengthening academic programs, supporting student organizations and providing scholarships. For more information on ways to give, visit giving.mercer.edu or contact the Office of University Advancement at (478) 301-2715.
